The Gilbert & Sullivan Very Light Opera Company owes an extraordinary debt of gratitude to the members of Gilbert and Sullivan Austin, who graciously shared with our company their reimagined version of the operetta, set in Scotland and retitled, The McAdo. They were equally gracious in allowing us to further (and rather freely) adapt it for our production.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

“Necessity is the mother of invention.”

For some time, Gilbert & Sullivan companies have been setting The Mikado in different locales and making adjustments to keep this extraordinary work alive. The best examples of this approach have found a way to honor all the key elements that Savoyards hold dear – the truly hilarious libretto, clever lyrics, and outstanding music – while jettisoning the offensive elements associated with its original setting, Japan – yellowface (the practice of wearing makeup to appear Asian) being chief among the offensive challenges. The McAdo is the brainchild of Gilbert & Sullivan Austin (Texas, not Minnesota!). They have been kind enough to share their work and then generous enough to let me tinker further with it to add, among other things, a prologue that helps address the history of The Mikado without getting too dogmatic or didactic.

While comedy is fragile, Gilbert's story is surprisingly flexible and resilient. Not many changes were required for this re-setting of the work. Most of the changes we've made are actually the kind in which Gilbert indulged: nods to current events, prominent figures, and regional idiosyncrasies.

I'm so very happy you're here and I hope you enjoy our production of The McAdo! If you're able, a donation of any size will help us to continue to bring all of the G&S operettas to the Twin Cities with full chorus, full orchestra, and full hearts!

— Joe Andrews

SYNOPSIS

Lanky Doug, a strolling minstrel, arrives in the Scottish town of Ballydew, seeking the hand of the beautiful Wynn Somme. He learns that Wynn Somme, however, is already engaged to Coco, a cheap tailor, who has been unexpectedly raised to the rank of Lord High Executioner. Lanky Doug is crestfallen. Meanwhile, Coco learns from The McAdo that he must execute someone within a month or irretrievable ruin will befall the town. Coco hits on a precarious plan that allows him to fulfill his obligations while simultaneously resolving Lanky Doug's heartbreak. Complications ensue (of course) when elements of Lanky Doug's secret past begin to emerge, including Katie Shaw, an elderly lady of The McAdo's court who claims his hand in marriage. The arrival of The McAdo escalates matters even further. But in true Gilbertian fashion, the story comes to a satisfying – if circuitous – conclusion.

Trigger Warning: The McAdo includes discussions of suicide. If you or anyone in your life is experiencing thoughts of suicide, you are encouraged to call 988, the National Suicide & Crisis Lifeline.

GLOSSARY (in order of occurrence)

ACT I:

Clan McAdo – An actual Scottish clan. The name McAdo is derived from the Gaelic surname Mac Adaidh, which means son of Adam. The surname McAdo was first found in Perthshire, a former county in the present-day Council Area of Perth and Kinross, in central Scotland, in the thirteenth century. Their home and clan seat was Strathardle at Petcarene.

Ballydew – A whimsical Scots version of the original Titipu, which was Gilbert's whimsical version of the actual Japanese town of Chichibu dirk to spar – long-bladed thrusting dagger, a personal sidearm of Highlanders serried ranks assembled – shoulder to shoulder

We'll heave the capstan round – a manually operated reel for hauling in ropes aboard a ship (usually the anchor)

Her anchor's a-trip and her helm's a-lee – A-trip means clear of mud and ready to be hauled aboard. A-lee means away from the wind; ready for making sail.

and a rumbelow – nonsense word used in many sea-chanties to lay aloft – to climb up into the rigging in order to raise or lower sails unless connubially linked – matrimonially (i.e., unless married)

Pre-Adamite ancestry – before Adam (and Eve); really old

I, a salaried minion! – servile underling you very imperfect ablutioner – Ablution is the act of washing one's self. The implication is that Lanky Doug smells bad.

cut a dash on their wedding day – put on a showy display, to dance

I don't say that all these distinguished people couldn't be squared – bribed freed from its genius tutelary – guardian spirit, guiding influence

Esplanade – a level open stretch of paved or grassy ground, especially one designed for walking – or concerts – along a shore

a Tremendous Swell – a very impressively distinguished person, a VIP

My father, the Lucius Junius Brutus of his race – A Roman consul (500 B.C.) who condemned his two sons to death, for their plotting to restore the monarchy interrupted an apostrophe – an exclamatory speech to a person or thing

With grief condign – suitable in a dull, dark dock – small enclosed space, or cell (originally, an animal cage)

a cheap and chippy chopper – the headsman's axe, apparently not of the best quality

Oh blind, that seest no equipoise – counterbalancing factor

Peas and carrots – words used very quietly by actors to look as if they are engaged in conversation on stage

I'll spoil your gay gambado – caper, from the French gambade, a leap or spring

Act II:

He glories all effulgent – Giving off a flood of light

though the tocsin sound ere long – a warning bell

Scots wha' hae wi' Wallace bled, an' Scots wham Bruce has aften led – The opening two lines of Robert Burns poem, "Scots Wha' Hae," written in 1793. It was considered Scotland's unofficial national anthem for many years. The song resembles a speech given by Robert Bruce in 1314 before the Battle of Bannockburn.

make each prisoner pent – locked up and gurgled and guggled – a bubbling, choking noise

I drew my snickersnee – a long knife or small sword (from the Dutch) compassing the death of the heir apparent – contriving, bringing about or becoming involved in any way

give artistic verisimilitude – appearance of truth

Cock-and-a-bull stories – unbelievable boastful fictions, from old fables in which animals carry on human conversations

Is this a time for airy persiflage? – light banter, from the French, persifler, to whistle

a little tom-tit – a small bird of the tit family, similar to chickadees

Dicky-bird – any small bird from the Congo or the Niger – The general region of central, west and northwest Africa. There are actually no tigers in the Congo or the Niger as they are not indigenous to Africa, but India.

a man is told off to be killed – counted off, or selected, as an officer might from a line of soldiers
