DIRECTOR'S NOTE

We aim in this production to communicate the freshness and vitality of one of Gilbert and Sullivan's lesser-known operas. Utopia Ltd., their next-to-last collaboration, received positive reviews at its premier in 1893: George Bernard Shaw reported that he "enjoyed the score of Utopia more than that of any of the previous Savoy operas." But it soon fell into obscurity; the D'Oyly Carte Company did not revive it until 1975.

That was a pity, because Utopia has much to offer—including a lot of beautiful music. Beyond that, its outlook is notably modern. Princess Zara returns to Utopia with a Cambridge degree and a determination to apply English reforms to Utopia's institutions, which have been corrupted by crony capitalists. (Sound relevant?) Among Gilbert's many resourceful heroines, Zara is distinctively modern because her main struggle is for public, not private, goals: to improve her nation, not simply to marry her beloved (she and Capt. Fitzbattleaxe are happy from start to finish). The English reformers, the "Flowers of Progress," provide multiple targets for Gilbert's satire. Of course, their reforms go awry—partly because the Utopians actually do reform better than the English do!

Moreover, Utopia, Ltd. is wacky in ways arguably beyond even the topsy-turvy plots of previous shows. It demonstrates why Gilbert and Sullivan are antecedents not only of American musical theater but of Monty Python's craziness. We've tried to reinforce this with a collection of visual shenanigans from corrupt judges wearing gangster attire to beach balls flying over the head of Utopia's supposedly "despotic" king.

One reason why Utopia, Ltd. fell into disuse, it seems, is that its original conception was too extravagant. An elaborate throne-room procession scene swelled the production costs. The original libretto was long-winded, mainly because Gilbert and Sullivan were no longer working so closely to edit and sharpen each other's contributions. Their partnership had ended in 1890 over the so-called "Carpet Quarrel" (a fight about the costs of renovating the Savoy Theater); they patched things up to write Utopia, Ltd. but never fully resumed their previous close (if often tense) collaboration.

The GSVLOC has revised Utopia, Ltd. to pare away unnecessary scenes and dialogue and allow the satire to cut through fully. We've also made Utopia's people descendants of English settlers who now wish to reconnect with their ancestral homeland. Moreover, we have set this production in the early 1960s—partly for visual features like "Mad Men" fashions and Kodak cameras, partly because that period saw swift social change in England. So when Lady Sophy trains Utopia's two younger princesses to be demure "English ladies," she is woefully behind the times. Goldbury's lyric "Whatever you are, be that" is a revelation to the Princesses, and still-relevant advice to us all.

- Maureen Kane Berg

SYNOPSIS

Act I — Generations ago, ancestors of the current Utopians fled England. Now, however, relations have been re-established, and Princess Zara is returning from her studies at Cambridge, escorted by a small troop of British "First Life Guards," headed by Capt. Fitzbattleaxe. Zara's two younger sisters are under the tutelage of Lady Sophy, an English governess with whom King Nigel has fallen in love. The King's life is being made miserable by the two "wise men" (Scaphio and Phantis) who, in Utopia's quirkily Gilbertian form of government ("despotism tempered by dynamite"), have the power to denounce the King to Tarara, the Public Exploder, who would then blow him up. Scaphio and Phantis seek further control by having Princess Zara marry one of them.

Zara has brought with her the "Flowers of Progress"—representatives of the supposed elements that have made Britain great. Each one makes recommendations, but it is Mr. Goldbury, the "company promoter," who inspires King Nigel to do what even glorious England has not yet managed to do: turn his country into a "company limited" (based on the "Joint Stock Companies Act of Parliament '62"). General rejoicing.

Act II — The first Utopia, Ltd. Board of Directors meeting celebrates the changes. Scaphio and Phantis, however, are dismayed to learn that their customers now claim limited liability and avoid payment. Even worse, as the King explains to them, a corporation can be "wound up" but not "blown up," so he need no longer fear them. Scaphio and Phantis plot with Tarara to stir up a revolt against the Flowers of Progress. Fortunately, Zara remembers the vital missing element which will ensure perfection. All ends in bliss, further praise for Britain, and a stirring Utopian "Hurrah!"

GLOSSARY (in order of occurrence)

$\underline{ACTI}$ :

Tarara—The Public Exploder's name is a reference to the recent music-hall hit song imported from America: "Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay!"

Girton—a women's college at Cambridge University, founded in 1869

Double-first in the world's university—in British higher education, top honors in two final examinations dynamite explodes in his auriculars—ears

Quaff the nectar, cull the roses – the joys of Utopian life: to drink a scrumptious beverage and pick flowers song of far niente—idleness (in Italian)

The Kodaks do their best—Kodak cameras (which came out in 1888) were advertised with the slogan "You press the button, we do the rest."

Knightsbridge nursemaids, serving fairies, Stars of proud Belgravian airies—servant girls the Guardsmen presumably have left behind in London marvelous philologist—one who studies words swell the county rate—increase the local taxes

what contango means and also backwardation—fees paid to postpone settlement of a stock purchase or sale, respectively

K.C.B.—Knight Commander of the (Order of the) Bath (high honor)

Q.C.—Queen's Counsel (senior lawyer)

M.P.—Member of Parliament (elected Politician)

terrify the simple Gaul—the French

Maxim gun and Nordenfelt—kinds of machine gun

Unbend your sails and lower your yards, unstep your masts—Capt. Corcoran's terms for undoing the rigging of sails on a ship (to use coal power instead)

thanks to coke—a fuel made from coal

a Rothschild you may be—wealthy family of bankers, famous since the 1700s

Company Limited—an incorporated company ("Inc.")

of sovereigns all the pink—the best

Joint Stock Companies Act of Parliament '62—This act made it easier for small investors to pool their resources and incorporate with reduced personal risk (limited liability). Note: Seven was the required number of founders to establish a company, and the word "limited" (Ltd.) had to be added to the company's name.

If you've the mad temerity our wishes thus to blink—If you are crazily bold enough to disregard our wishes

ACT II:

the notes of lover's lay—a poem to be sung

whispered virelay—ancient French verse form

all that isn't Belgrave Square is Strand and Piccadilly—fashionable areas of London an English girl of eleven stone two—A stone equals 14 pounds, so Goldbury's ideal girl weighs 156 lbs.—of course, she's 5 foot 10.

Eleven maids out, eleven maids in, And perhaps an occasional "maiden over!"—Cricket playing references (a "maiden over" is analogous to a scoreless inning in baseball)

She'll waltz away like a teetotum—a kind of top

If my speech is unduly refractory—disobedient

short-petticoated—an indication of being a young girl (before wearing long skirts)

that asinorum pons I have crossed—actually, "pons asinorum," or Bridge of Asses; schoolboy slang for one of Euclid's propositions, due to the difficulty of "getting over" it

Government by party—The US and the UK use opposite color distinctions to define their parties. In Britain, it is the conservative Tories that are blue, while in the US it's the more liberal Democrats. What might it mean in Utopia?

Limited monarchy—where the powers of the monarch are limited by law (vs. an absolute monarchy)
